The Author of "spoopendyke Papers" Die of Bright's Disease. NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Stanley Huntley, a well known journalist, died in this city of Bright's disease. He was the son of a wel known New York lawyer and was born 1845. He achieved no little celebrity as the author of the "Spoopendyke Papers," which he wrote for the Brooklyn Eagle. He en tered business life as a reporter for the Western Press and was for a lon-time connected with Chicago newspaper While in the west he had some remarkable experiences with the Indians, and by curin a chief of one of the tribes, he was adopted in the tribe and subsequently, it is said, b came a medicine man.

He came east about six years ago and since that time has been identified with the press of New York and Brooklyn. As a writer he possesses a great fund of humos and considerable discriptive ability. Western Union's Canadian Rival.

Montriell, July 31.—The monopoly the telegraph service of Canada by the Western Union through its connection with the Great Northwestern is about at an end in about a month the Canadian Pacific railway and telegraph service between her and Winnipeg will be thrown open to the public. In telegraph circles here it is said that great efforts were made by Le Great Montriell. public. In telegraph circles here it is said that great efforts were made by Jay Gould to get control of the Canadian Pacific lines but they were unsuccessful. Negotiation are on foot for laying a cable to connect the Canadian Pacific system with Australia China and Japan. The United States connections will probably be over the Vander bilt railway system, with which the Pacific is on excellent terms.

A Physician's Evidence.

People, as a general thing, endorse a medicine according to the effect produced upon individuals, but a remedy to be of universal good, must cure in all similar instances; hence the evidence of a physician is of paramount importance in summing the salutatory and curative advantages of a remedy when largely used by the people. In this respect Mansfield's Magic Arnica Liniment is supported by an astonishing array of evidence, and among others, Dr. T. Harbors, of Magenta, Ark., says: "In almost every house I find your preparations, especially the 'Magic Arnica Liniment.' I have noticed its effects in cases of rheumatism and neuraligia, and it acts in truly a magical way, giving almost instantaneous relici."
